Mr. Bowzz, the unfortunate gentleman who stands accused of a plurality of vives, is yet out of prison, although not quit of judges, juries, witnesses and lawyers. It is very hard on a Congressman, who, of all men, has least need of a plurality of wives. Why should a man, with the world of Washington, to say nothing of the world. Why should a man, with the world of Washington, to say nothing of the world of womankind, before him, go and many more than one woman? It is the unpardonable blunder, the unescapable six. No bigamist was ever known to go free. There is not a nook, not a woodland lodge, not an islet in the sea, not an oasis in the desert, 'no hermit cell in obscure regions far sway,' no transformation, no change of name, no disguise that will afford security against the woman who has a mind to hunt you sown and take you again to her agonized but loving bosom. Be sure of this. Bigamy will out, There exists a feminine instinct that is uncerting; and the strange, romantic story we are about to relate illustrates the fact in a most striking manner. Mr. Bowen can read it at his leisure. It is too late we fear for him to 'profit by it. But it may convey a lessen to carpot-knights

Many years ago, as a matter of fact in 1850, a young Teuton, of good family and small fortune, set out from the little village of Sturngarten, which is about ten mites inland from the Rhine, and in one of the obscurest and most insccessible districts of Germany. He repaired first to Paris, where he conceived the idea of disusing his own name and assuming another. Thus a stranger, unknown and unattended, and answering a fictitious address, he visited London; strolled over England, Scotjand and Ireland; went on a voyage up the Mediterranean; and, being of an expansive turn, took passage in a Chrine packet and so-journed a year in Pekm. Finally, he journed a year in Pekin. Finally, he crossed over to Yeddo, and thence came to California. He considered himself to all intents lost to his natural world. He all intents lost to his natural world. He had grown in stature and strength, and was, mevery respect, another person. By this time, however, he began to grow serious, and resolved to turn his attention to some sober work. Being a ready accountant, he found no difficulty in obtaining employment in San Francisco. But he grew weary of the rough life which was then in vogue there and came overland to Kentucky. He stopped in Louisville, was engaged by a Main street house, and gave so much satisfaction that he was presently sent on a collecting tour into Georgia. In those days transportation was slow. those days transportation was slow. Northern Georgia was almost inaccessible. At Dalton he had to take a saddle-horse to go to Rome and the adjacent

The Southern Review.

The first article in the current number of the Southern Quarterly Review in upon the Suffering and Salvation of Intants, chiefly remarkable for convicting Mr. Licux of gross misrepresentation in asserting that the unanimous belief of the early church condemned newborn infants to eternal damastics. Of this writer the Review says: "Mr. Licux exhausts far too much of his stock of patience and pollastaking on the elegance and pollas of his style to have a sufficiency left to bestow on the accuracy and the truthfulness of his statements. We quote this sentence as showing what seems to us the element in this periodical that inserierce with its useriouses, and is, in acc, mecompatible with the judicial salrness and literary merit of a publication of the kind. Bitter and ascrastic statements will almost always excite a temporary feeling of amusement, but never increase our respect for the person that utters them, and, when they become habitual, they almost entirely vitiate all his serious and carnest remarks. And we may say, in passing, that the one great fault of the literature, that may be styled distinctively Southern, has been the unwise and unscholarly contempt of everything originating north of a certain line, and the indiscriminate and injudicious praise of everything emanating south of the same limit. In the republic of letters at least, there should be no geographical boundaries. The second arrivele is the same limit. In the republic of letters at least, there should be no geographical boundaries. The second arisele is on pathetic poetry and is an attempt to critically analyze its power. So far as the opinions of many learned writers, from Lord Bacon to Salexy Bruve, are given, it is excellent; but what can we think of the merits of a writer who declares that "modern lite consists of these: "O' and 'il' and 'but' and 'would that," and who, in one paragraph, says the pathes of King Lear is inferior in popularity to that of Romeo and Juliet, and, in another place, specifies the former tragedy as always creating an almost overpowering impression of pathos? A Young Man Elopes with His Step-Mother—The Erring Woman Taken Home.

(Chicago Times' Springfield (ill.) Lotier.]

A few days since the quiet and respectable village of Abburs, in this county, was electrified with the result of a free-love affair, which originated in Ohio. Bredly told, the story is as follows: One Hiller, up to three mouths sgo, was tiving quietly near a small town in the interior of Ohio. His family consisted of his second wife, and a son, 34 years old by his former wife. Mrs. Hiller was to the start of the start of the second wife, and a son, 34 years old by his former wife. Mrs. Hiller was to the start of the second wife, and the was to the second wife, and the was some friends living in a small railroad town about afteen miles distant, and after some bersuasion her husband agreed to convey her thinker in this earlings. When, however, they arrived within a snort distance of the town, she persuaded her husband to return home and slow her to seconmish the results of the second with the second was absent. This did not, however, surprise him greatly, as the young man was frequently away from home on visits to other familles in the neighborhood. He was surprised, however, when, some days afterward, on going to the house his wife had proposed to visit, he discovered ship had to be been shown that the second was supplied to the serape, he disnothed had so been should train at the station and departed. Here was a stratalion, indeed, but in amuch as Mr. Hiller could see no way of acing men of the first the property of the serape, he disnothed wife, dated the house his wife had conduct the world agreed test, be knew to runaways had been of he is and so left home they had both got on sugard the should be and so been should the world agreed test, be knew something of women, for shoul Feb. 5th he received a letter from his wife, dated at Auburn. Last evening, at Websiger Hall, Mr. George Kennan delivered a lecture on the Mountains and Mountainers of the Guacasse, under the ampices of the Young Men's Christian Association. On account of the very stormy evening the attendance was very small; but we understand that the lecture will be repeated next Monday night, at Association Hall, corner of Fath and Walbut streets. As this other opportunity is slowded of hearing Mr. Kennan's seconn of his travels, we withhold a full report we had prepared. The lecture was most interesting and instructive, and much of the information regarding the topography of the region and the pocular customs of the inhabitaint can be learned through no other source.

Dr. C. H. Wintersmith:

Dam Sum—It this will be of any benefit to ron, neet. I came to this place last January. In a law days siter my arrival i was called on by Mr. com andrews, of this place, who had been suf-triag with sore eyes for four years. I examined the found that the few days after my arrival I was massed as a jobin Andrews, of this place, who had been saffering with sore eyes for four years, Texamined him—found that the cause was acrollul. I commenced treating him with your locited Saraperilla and Stillingria, and an happy to say that in five or six weekabe came to me perfectly well.
The next case was Mr. E. G. Darti, who has had serorinis for twelve or fifteen years. At turns he would have to give us work in his shop, and to-day he is sound and been uffering with extential in his eyes for kly years. I treated him with your saransparilla, and lo-day he can see to shoot a rifle. The fourth case is Mr. Backies, who is improving rapidly, and mans others, and and a will say sous locited Sarasparilla and Stillingria is a hiessing to suff ring humanity. Hopfing that you may continue to keep if rom bedne adoutersted, that the afficiend may be thereby
